

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS AT THE NEW SCHOOL, NEW YORK CITY

PREPARING GLOBAL LEADERS FOR THE 21ST CENTURY

Our curriculum at the Julien J. Studley Graduate Programs in International Affairs at The New School meshes theory, policy and practice, and builds on:

- A Critical and Global Perspective - Develop independent thinking and progressive approaches to global problems, challenge conventional paradigms, and offer alternative frameworks.
- Transdisciplinary Social Research - Draw on courses and faculty expertise in the social sciences, humanities, media, architecture, and design.
- Engaged, Field-Based Learning - Experience our practicum projects, UN Summer Study, or the one-of-a-kind International Field Program.
- Flexibility and Customization - Tailor your degree to your interests and goals through part-time or full-time study, client-based projects, and research-based thesis options.
- International Community - More than half of our faculty and a third of our students come from outside the United States, bringing diverse global perspectives into the classroom.

Learn more about the International Affairs community at The New School by visiting our blog: newschool-ia.org.

APPLICATIONS OPEN!

CHOOSE FROM TWO DEGREE OPTIONS

Master of Arts

- 42 credits
- No professional experience required
- Choose from five concentrations: Development, Cities & Social Justice, Governance & Rights, Media & Culture, and Conflict & Security

Master of Science

- 30 credits (can be completed in 12 months)
- 3 years experience required
- Flexible modules that cultivate a unique combination of substantive knowledge and practical tools

START YOUR CAREER BEFORE YOU GRADUATE

Take full advantage of New York City's extraordinary range of NGOs, intergovernmental institutions, and global companies for student research, internships, and practicums. Make connections with more than 1,500 International Affairs alumni working around the world in public, private, non-profit, and academic organizations.

For more information, visit newschool.edu/international-affairs.